FDA Requiring Prescription for Antibiotics for Livestock

According to Texas A&M Agrilife Extension service, Cattle, and all other livestock, will soon require a vet's prescription for injectable antibiotics

No longer will producers who need injectable antibiotics for their cattle be able to just grab them at their local feed store or order them online.

The Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Service wants producers to be aware that the U.S. Food and Drug Administration is continuing the phasing in of a law that requires a prescription for any antibiotic use in animals raised for human consumption, as well as for all companion animals. A prescription is already required for most antibiotics delivered to livestock, and the remaining three categories of injectable antibiotics available over-the-counter will soon be joining the list of medically important antimicrobials that require a veterinarian's prescription. "It will cause a little bit of difficulty because producers who want and need to use antibiotics are going to have to work with their beef cattle or livestock veterinarians and develop a veterinary client-patient relationship in advance of any disease issues," said Joe Paschal, Ph.D., AgriLife Extension livestock specialist, Corpus Christi.

Paschal recommends producers should, if they haven't already, develop a relationship with a local veterinarian to be prepared for these changes. People should also be aware that these laws apply to companion animals like horses.

"This means that your veterinarian knows who you are, knows the kind of livestock you are raising and what you are doing with them, understands your management, and that you agree if they come out to diagnose an illness and use an antimicrobial to treat a disease or illness, you will follow their directions including dosage, duration and withdrawal," he said.

FDA rules and regulations

The FDA's Center for Veterinary Medicine stated a two-year phase-in period would be allowed once the FDA Government Guidance document is finalized. A draft version is currently available online. The FDA has had a law in place since 2017, which made most antibiotics administered to livestock by prescription only. These new guidelines further extend the need for veterinarian oversight by including the remaining injectable antibiotics.

Tylosin, penicillin and tetracyclines are among some of the more popular antibiotics still available over the counter as injectables – for now. In 2018, the FDA published a five-year plan for phasing out all antibiotics without a veterinarian's prescription. The plan should be fully implemented by 2023, although compliance is expected as soon as 2020

Badger Sports

Football

Lampasas Badgers (10-1) are Bi-district Champs and headed to the Area game on Friday.

Here is where the competition begins to get tougher!

As of this morning we note that CBS-MaxPreps web site has Lampasas standing in Division 4A-1 at number 11. Lampasas opponent for the Area game, Gonzales (9-2), is listed as number 16.

The AP/Texas Football polls won't be out until this afternoon to see where they have the teams ranked.

The game, to be played on Friday in Pflugerville at Pfield, will see high scoring and most of it in the air Lampasas pitted against typically lower scoring and mostly running team Gonzales. The common factor between the two teams is that they both have excellent quarterbacks that both run very well. It should be a great game.

Other district 14 teams:

Fredericksburg is out after losing to El Campo 20-14

Canyon Lake is out, losing to Needville 40-33.

Liberty Hill beat West 44-8 and goes on to play La Feria this week in an Area game.

Basketball

Badger Basketball hosted Rosebud-Lott at Lampasas High School on Saturday. The Lampasas JV started the season out with a 51-18 win. Badger Varsity Basketball also won 58-35.

This week Badger basketball will be heading to Llano tomorrow with JV starting at 5pm and Varsity at 7:30pm. On Saturday the Badgers head to Brownwood with JV tipping off at noon and Varsity at 1:15pm.

The Lady Badgers host Jarrell at home tomorrow night with games starting at 5:30pm.
